For kitchen counter dining spaces, 24-inch bar stools are usually the proper height for comfortable seating. For traditional bar settings, 30-inch bar stools are the right height. Typical bars are 42 inches tall, and the 30-inch bar stools provide enough height and legroom in these settings.

Simple swivel bar stools with a plain fabric, vinyl, or leather padded seat atop three or four curved steel legs are available in numerous finishes, including antique brass, titanium, and black coral, and retail for under $150. Stainless steel bar stools with 360-degree swivel and backs can also be had at fairly low prices.

For a slightly more upscale design, the “croissant” style swivel bar stool, with the frame of the curved back and arms that are all of one piece, is a beautiful, elegant design. The back features padding, as does the seat. This steel swivel bar stool gets its name from the crescent shape across the back that seamlessly marries the curved steel back with the arms. Countless combinations of metal finish and fabric or leather cushioning make this design flexible enough to go with any color scheme or type of décor. For example, a croissant steel swivel bar stool in a copper or sienna finish with black or cocoa colored padding would be right at home in a room featuring more traditional wood furnishings because of its subdued tones.

If you are going for a more retro or vintage look, then the swivel soda counter bar stools in chrome finish like the ones in 1950s soda shops are perfect. These are metal bar stools that will inspire delight with their funky, yet unobtrusive style. But if you are going for an ultra high-class look, whether indoors or outdoors, stainless steel bar stools and accessories cannot be beat.

Steel swivel bar stools make a stunning statement when done in simple, curved lines paired with bright colored cushions. However, you can have steel swivel bar stools with dark, matte finishes and rustic accent colors that will blend in nicely with other rustic furnishings. Wrought Iron Bar Stools Used since the 16th century, wrought iron is a timeless decorating material for indoors or outdoors, and wrought iron bar stools are just as timeless and versatile. The first recorded incidence of wrought iron being used in construction was during the building of Notre Dame de Paris. However, for many centuries before that, iron was used in battle, and was referred to in Greek and Roman mythology with the stories of Vulcan and Hephaestus. Blacksmiths were once seen as almost magical, because of their ability to change the Composition of wrought iron using fire and water.

Wrought iron bar stools are made in every shape and style imaginable: swiveling, backless, with or without arms, as 24-inch kitchen counter bar stools and 30-inch standard bar stools. They can be used to customize the look of your standard bar or kitchen bar, are relatively inexpensive, and are very sturdy and solid. Prices for wrought iron bar stools range from just over $100 to around $550 each.

Wrought iron allows for great variations in style, even in a single category of furniture like bar stools. It can be made with decorative flourishes and curlicues for an old fashioned look, or it can be formed into simple elegant lines that are right at home with modern furniture. Hillsdale bar stools are often made with wrought iron, and they are built for comfort, durability, and elegance.

Buying bar stools can be a pleasant experience if you do a little research before you shop. Many online retailers of bar stools offer free shipping and coupons for discounts. You also need to calculate what height your bar stools should be. Standard bar stools are 30 inches tall and work well with bars that are 42 inches tall. Generally, 10 to 12 inches between the seat of a bar stool and the bar is a good rule of thumb.

You will want to calculate how many wrought iron bar stools you need. One quick way is to measure the length of your bar in inches, and divide by 28. If you are buying wrought iron bar stools with arms, or that swivel, allow a little more room between them. Ideally, you should have 25 to 28 inches spanning the distance from the center of one bar stool to the next.

If you're in the market for outdoor bar stools, wrought iron is a great choice. Wrought iron bar stools come in numerous frame styles, finishes, and upholstery options and can go with any patio or outdoor bar design. Often wrought iron outdoor bar stools come with a 10 to 15 year warranty on the frame and a 3 to 5 year warranty on the powder coated finish. Many retailers will guarantee that your wrought iron outdoor bar stools won't peel. Peeling of wrought iron furniture is much less of a problem than it was 30 years ago. Fortunately, modern wrought iron finishing compounds make the design better suited than ever for outdoor bar stools.

There is no question about it. Wrought iron bar stools are one of the most wide ranging styles available. This material is used for everything from water pipes to railway couplings today, and can also be used to make intricately decorative ironwork in fences and handrails.

Because of wrought iron's unique properties of being malleable, sturdy, and non-brittle, bar stools from wrought iron can be made in just about any design imaginable. And with better coatings available now, wrought iron is even more suited to an outdoor environment. All this, and wrought iron bar stools are reasonably priced. It would be hard to go wrong if you choose wrought iron as your bar stool material.
