furnishing a room with a western theme, then this type of rustic bar stool is worth checking out.

Even if you don't have rustic furnishings, you can still fit rustic bar stools into your design. Choose a key element in your current design and echo that element in the design of rustic bar stool you pick. For example a wooden bar stool with a curved arm or back can complement the lines of a curved-back sofa.

Outdoor bar stools in a rustic style fit nicely into natural surroundings. They don't have to look old fashioned or "country." Rustic bar stools can be made with clean, smooth lines that look beautiful even with modern furniture.

You can order wooden bar stools handmade from kiln-dried wood that are designed to last a lifetime. Obviously, these are more expensive than factory made bar stools. When choosing a bar stool design, it is important to know the height of the bar it will accompany. There should be 12 inches from the bottom of the bar top to the top of the bar stool for adequate leg room. Choose 30-inch bar stools for a bar 40 to 42 inches high. For kitchen counter bar stools, choose a 24-inch height for your bar stools. Bar stools should be spaced with 25 to 30 inches between the center of one stool and the center of the next. Calculate how many you'll need by measuring the length of your bar in inches, and dividing it by 28. If you choose swivel bar stools, or bar stools designed like chairs, add a little extra room for each one.

You can also use a rustic bar stool as the base for a table if it is flat on top. Add a glass or wood table top, and you have an inexpensive, impromptu rustic table. This idea works best with 30-inch bar stools, because 24-inch bar stools are too short. The rustic bar stool is one type of bar stool that will always be in style. A wood swivel bar stool incorporates tradition and modern furniture design in one piece. And if it is the design you choose is backless, it saves space because it can be pushed up underneath the bar ledge.

Rustic designs can be backless bar stools, or mission bar stools. Iron is often used in rustic bar stool designs, as are wicker and bamboo. Selecting bar stools will take some time. You'll need to research prices and designs, and you'll have to choose the right height for your bar.

"Rustic" is a style that encompasses much. Rustic bar stools can be old fashioned or ultra-modern, sleek or ornate. Outdoor stools and Cowboy/Western Bar Stools sometimes incorporate twigs in their designs. Discount bar stools cost under $200. You can customize the look of your kitchen, kitchen bar, or dining room with inexpensive twig bar stool designs. You may wonder if rustic twig bar stools look good paired with modern furniture. The answer is yes! Rustic twig bar stools fit into décor styles featuring modern furniture, where they add a vintage, funky look.

The height of your rustic twig bar stools is determined by their use. If they will be used as bar stools, then 30 inch bar stools are the right height. If they will be used as kitchen counter bar stools, 24 inch bar stools are the right height.

Though the number of designs of twig rustic bar stools is fewer than other designs, buying bar stools of this type allows you to customize to some extent. Twig rustic bar stools can be backless bar stools, or they can feature backs, or customized seat shapes. Even if the surrounding furniture is of modern design, these bar stools can not only fit in, but enhance the ambience with their simple rustic charm. The look of twig rustic bar stools can be softened by adding cushions that echo the surrounding décor.

Common types of wood for making twig rustic bar stools include alder and willow. Willow is inexpensive and grows quickly, and as anyone with willow trees on their property can tell you, you almost can't get rid of it. Some call willow the American version of bamboo. Alder wood, a type of birch, has fine close grain that is easily stained and finished. Both are great for customized rustic twig bar stool design.

One advantage of using willow for twig bar stools is that it is still "green" when harvested, but dries after being made into furniture. For that reason, makers of willow twig bar stools pre-drill even the tiniest holes they need, so that when the furniture is assembled and dries, it won't crack around the screws. Done properly, the furniture ends up remarkably sturdy.

Attachments to end grains of wood use 3-inch screws, which give these junctures excellent holding power. Because twig furniture involves "green" wood, it can be molded and twisted to some degree to regularize the shapes made from it. Diagonal braces are used on every side of a twig rustic bar stool for strength and stability.

Twig rustic bar stools should be cared for as any piece of hardwood furniture. It will last longer out of the weather, but placed outdoors, the useful life of twig rustic bar stools can be prolonged if it is treated with a mixture of boiled linseed oil and mineral spirits, and if it is brought indoors during bad weather.
